Q: Generating 100% unique database keys by code I have a table in my database that already has millions of rows in it. My database is a little out of date, but it was doing its job just fine, and I never expected it to be the bottleneck in my application. However, due to the relatively low number of active users, my tables are getting sluggish. So, I wanted to try to generate 100% unique keys for each row in the table. I did this by including a column in the table, which is an auto-incrementing integer. Now, I want to try to set up a cron job to run each night, before I go to bed. Then, once I wake up the following morning, it will run through all of the rows in the table and remove all of the rows that have the same value for the auto-incrementing integer. However, I want to run a query that will remove the auto-incremented integer from the column before I proceed. Is there any way that I can do this? The reason I want to remove the auto-incremented integer from the column is because it causes all sorts of database/indexing problems. I currently have access to a PHP cron job, however, I've never used it before and have no idea how to execute these queries. I can figure out how to write them, but I just need a step-by-step guide to get me started. I would greatly appreciate any help. Thank you!

A: You will probably want to do the following in a trigger rather than a maintenance schedule. This will ensure that the last_value of your sequence is a UNIQUE constraint, so you do not have to worry about having the same value. ALTER SEQUENCE yoursequence_id RESTART WITH 23; ALTER TABLE yourtable ADD CONSTRAINT yourtable_id_seq PRIMARY KEY USING INDEX (ID); CREATE INDEX ix_yourtable_id_seq ON yourtable (id); DROP TRIGGER YOURTRIGGER ON yourtable AFTER
